CECP-866-01 68009	Foundations of Ecopsych Thomas Doherty CECP 866-01 meets 9a-5p S/SU 10/6-7, 11/3-4, and 12/8-9/07; CECP 866-01 is crosslisted with CPSY 590-01 Ecopsychology is a contemporary movement within psychology that recognizes a connection between mental health and the natural environment and explores ways in which psychology can contribute to the solution of environmental problems. This course provides an introduction to ecopsychology practices in counseling and surveys related to research-based approaches, such as environmental and conservation psychology, that study the restorative effects of natural settings and ways that individuals develop environment identities. Students will be guided toward self-reflection regarding their own environmental identity, their motivations for integrating environmental approaches into counseling, and ways to integrate ecopsychology into their existing theory and practice base. A key outcome will be learning to evaluate diverse knowledge claims that coexist under the ecopsychology paradigm. This course provides a foundation for further study in areas such as the psychology of advocacy and sustainability, ecotherapy, and wilderness therapy. 	Dr. Joan Hartzke McIlroy People are often challenged by the dynamic tension between constancy and change. Students, clients and colleagues might resist opportunities for change that are seen as beneficial by the professionals that served them. CPSY-590-01 41059	Foundations of Ecopsych Thomas Doherty CPSY 590-01 meets 9a-5p S/SU 10/6-7, 11/3-4, and 12/8-9/07; CPSY 590-01 is crosslisted with CECP 866-01. Ecopsychology is a contemporary movement within psychology that recognizes a connection between mental health and the natural environment and explores ways in which psychology can contribute to the solution of environmental problems. This course provides an introduction to ecopsychology practices in counseling and surveys related research-based approaches, such as environmental and conservation psychology, that study the restorative effects of natural settings and ways that individuals develop environment identities. Students will be guided toward self-reflection regarding their own environmental identity, their motivations for integrating environmental approaches into counseling, and ways to integrate ecopsychology into their existing theory and practice base. A key outcome will be learning to evaluate diverse knowledge claims that coexist under the ecopsychology paradigm. This course provides a foundation for further study in areas such as the psychology of advocacy and sustainability, ecotherapy, and wilderness therapy. Description: Let's define "poetry" as the art of the rich fragment in words that cherishes moments, transforms ways of seeing, and offers a gift to readers. We will make of our sessions a series of opportunities to write together, to share a portion of what we create with one another, and to gather a small portfolio of rich beginnings in poetry for on-going practice. (Along the way we may enrich our instincts as teachers of writing in a variety of forms.)

The prevailing invitation for the workshop: To experience what it is like to carry the hints given to you daily as far as they will go in writing, and to consider how this process could become easier, more predictable, and most useful in your life as a thinker, writer, a witness and a teacher.

Dates: Wednesdays, 10/17 - 11/14
Time: 5pm - 7:30pm

Description: This two-day workshop is for teachers and community members of all ages who want to explore Portland's history with race and racism. We will start with a Friday night workshop that centers on two central questions:

1. How do segregation and racial disparities persist after the Civil Rights Era?
2. How does Portland's history with segregation and environmental racism compare to the national history?

Lessons explore the multiple causes of racial segregation and environmental racism and help students understand how institutional racism is perpetuated today. This includes a mock tribunal and examination of local history with ongoing segregation and racism.

On Saturday, participants will go to a coffee shop on Mississippi, a school in North Portland, and a community center downtown where we will meet Portland residents who lived through these times and who fought back. At each spot we will read, write and share.

Dates: Friday and Saturday, October 12-13 Times:

ED-639-XXX	OWP: Tchg the Essay Gr 6-8 Grad Faculty OWP: Teaching the Essay Grades 6-8 Description: Teaching essay writing to middle school students can be a tug of war between prescription and freedom. How much instruction do students need? How much do we scaffold instruction so that students can write a coherent essay? When does scaffolding become prescriptive and formulaic? This is an inquiry course for 6-8 grade teachers as well as teachers of high school students who struggle with essay writing. In this ten-week course, participants will investigate essay writing from generation to revision and editing by participating in writing workshops themselves. Participants will also: Explore effective essay writing practices for teaching young writers Discover how to immerse students in a genre to improve student writing Practice and develop craft lessons for more effective essay writing instruction Share ideas and draw on the experiences of other teachers Take away lesson plans and strategies Improve organization and management of Writing Workshop Dates: Thursdays, 09/27 - 12/06 Time: 4:30pm - 6:30pm Location: Jefferson Young Women's Academy Instructor: Melanie Morris &amp; Anna Wessinger Credits: Two semester hours Cost: $160 for non-degree applicable credit $700 for degree applicable credit	LEC	OC	OFF-CMPS TH	04:30PM 09/27/07 06:30PM 12/06/07	Week	2.00
