

April 28, 4:30-7:30 p.m., Graduate Campus Conference Center

RSVP
gradalum@lclark.edu

Deepening Practice for Social Justice

As teachers, counselors, and change agents in schools and communities, we hear stories of personal and social devastation in our daily practice; we see pervasive images of ecological, economic and emotional disaster everywhere we look. Each day we encounter signs of injustice and opportunities to make change. It is easy to feel overwhelmed. The pathways toward change are often difficult to see.

How do we balance our drive to address suffering and oppression with the necessity of maintaining our energy and our vibrant personal lives? What would we need to move from feelings of individual powerlessness to action for social transformation? In this workshop, we will dialogue together in small and large groups to share methods and practices for creating a life of balance and more effective strategies for social change.

We look forward to L & C graduate students, alumni, faculty and their professional colleagues joining us for this workshop that includes a complimentary dinner.

Complimentary dinner from 4:30 - 6:00 p.m. Workshop from 6:00 - 7:30 p.m.

Free
CEU!

Karen Hixson

Karen Hixson uses a social justice lens to inform her work as a Licensed Professional Counselor. She is also an adjunct instructor in the Counseling Psychology program at Lewis & Clark. In her spare time, she can be found hiking in the Columbia River Gorge and walking beaches on the Oregon Coast.

Rebecca Hyman

Rebecca Hyman is a mental health therapist at Central City Concern and an adjunct professor in the Portland State University School of Social Work. She has been involved in a number of activist organizations and works with others to find ways to make social justice work joyous and energizing.

Tod Sloan

Tod Sloan is professor of Counseling Psychology in the Graduate School of Education and Counseling at Lewis & Clark, where he recently initiated Project Dialogue. He served as national co-coordinator of Psychologists for Social Responsibility from 2001-2004, and currently focuses on developing ways to support activists in progressive social movements.